A lady who was a passenger on the SS Liguria to Australia in May last, writing to her brother in Edinburgh, gives an account of a melancholy event which occurred while the vessel was at St Vincent and terminated in the death of Mr William Jackson, ironmonger, late of Edinburgh. While the steamer was at anchor the passengers went ashore in boats manned partly by Portugese and partly by Africans. On returning, a squall sprang up, endangering some of the boats that were overcrowded, and one containing fourteen passengers, amongst whom were Mr Jackson, his wife, and two children, filled and sank. Fortunately they were close to the Liguria, and her lifeboat was launched in a short space of time, or they would all have been inevitably drowned. As it was, and by the aid of a saloon passenger, who courageously sprang into the water to their rescue, they succeeded in placing the unfortunate people in the lifeboat, but Mr Jackson, missing one of his children, went down again after her, and became so exhausted that little hopes were entertained for his recovery. He lived until the following Wednesday morning, when he died leaving a widow and two children.
