General Notes: Smyly Family Book of Colleton County, SC 1775-2002 summary.

According to family tradition, the Black family of Colleton County is of Scottish descent, being originally a part of Clan Alpine, later of Clan Lamont and Clan MacLean-MacGregor. The first member of the Black family to come to South Carolina was Robert Black who came to Georgetown, SC from Scotland, along with two brothers, names not known. Robert had traveled to America as Redemptionist or Indentured Servant who had to work out the cost of his passage and was put to work on a plantation. For two days he worked in the fields but refused to eat a bowl of mush served him along with the other laborers. The lady of the house, seeing that he evidently was a gentleman of refinement, on the third day had his food served with a tray and linen. He then began to eat. Donald indicates this first Robert Black did not serve in the American Revolution. There were three men named Robert Black who served South Carolina during that war. One was wounded at Sullivans Island and died 1 July 1776. It is believed that this first Robert Black settled in St. Bartholomew Parish prior to 1790. He is shown there in the 1790 census. At that time St. Bartholomew was in Charleston District, that part of Charleston District became Colleton District around 1800. Most researchers including my cousin indicate the first Bob Black had only one child, a son named Robert. There is speculation that the early Robert's wife was a Smoak. The 1810 census indicates the first Robert Black's household consisted on a male age 26 and under 45; and 4 males age 10 and under 16. Also there was one female aged 26 and under 45 and another female age 10 and under 16. By 1820, Robert had passed away. There is a household headed by an Elizabeth Black. Judging by her neighbors she was living in the same area where Robert was in 1810. Her household consisted of 1 male 10 and under 16. One female under 10 years of age, a female 10 and under 16, a female over 45. A document dated 6 Feb 1815 indicates that the state of South Carolina had given Robert Black 412 acres of land "...in the district of Colleton on branches and waters of Buck Head Swamp a branch of the Little Salkahatchie.." Using the Mills Atlas as a reference the first Bob Black lived on the Columbia Road, now US 21 in the area of Smoaks. Probably where the Methodist Church is today.

Descendants of William Black
